A lone dwelling house perhaps associated with the clachan of Ockle, with rounded corners, walls standing to ~1m, and door in NE wall; there may also be an entrance, perhaps formed later, in the SW wall. It is surrounded by run-rig fields, and sits in a depression against a slight knoll. The north corner is infilled to make a square structure of unknown purpose but which has been found in several similar structures.
